

Single Family Homes

Single-family homes are in urban residential neighborhoods with between 4 and 8 dwellings per acre. This provides for stable and attractive suburban residential neighborhoods that have a full range of public services and facilities.

They are also found in areas inappropriate for more intense urban development due to significant environmentally critical areas, extreme cost, or difficulty in extending public facilities or the presence of natural features Redmond is seeking to retain. These areas allow for between 1 and 3 dwellings per acre.
